LINCOLN STATUE IN BROOKLYN.

Address by Rev. R. S. Storrs, Jr., D.D.

The unveiling of the Lincoln Statue in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, a few days since, was witnessed by not less than 15,000 persons. It was erected by the dollar subscription fund raised by citizens without regard to party connection. The statue is of bronze, about nine feet high, and represents the figure of the late President standing, with the folds of a cloak draped about him; his left hand is extended, and holds a manuscript. The head is uncovered. The figure stands upon a base of Scotch granite, and faces the west. On the sides of the pedestal are various emblems and inscriptions. On the east and west, wreaths inclosing "U. S. A." and "U. S. N;" on the south, an eagle holding a shield, in the centre of which is a female holding an ax, and supported by a bundle of reeds, with the motto, "Een draght maakt Maght;" on the north is an eagle with a broken shackle in his talons. The sculptor is Mr. H. K. Brown.

We present below the address delivered on the occasion by Rev. Dr. Storrs, Jr.:

ADDRESS OF DR. R. S. STORRS, JR.

FELLOW CITIZENS: We are assembled to day to rejoice in the completion of a work honorable for the tender and grateful impulse in which it originated; honorable for the cheerful fidelity and zeal with which it has been carried to its present consummation; honorable, we doubt not, for the influence that shall flow from it into the future. More than four years after his death—in a city which he had rarely entered—on heights on which his foot had never trodden—by the voluntary contributions of persons, most of whom certainly had never seen him, unless in his coffin, and many of whom had been his earnest political opponents, this statue is erected to Abraham Lincoln. As a work of art, it is its own advocate. As a memorial of him whom we could not wish it otherwise than it is. It is the first statue of such material, raised by spontaneous gifts from the people, to commemorate him in the land which he ruled, and among the cities whose streets were shrouded at his death. It is a fit occasion of pride and pleasure to us that the purpose to erect it, which sprang up simultaneously with the tidings of his death, has thus among us been accomplished, and that here henceforth it is to stand; on the summit crest of our expanding and beautiful city; on a spot consecrated, more than ninety years since, by the patriot blood which then so freely and fruitfully fell; overlooking the homes and working places of a million and a half of the American people; looking out upon the bay, through which passes so large and rich a portion of the commerce of the world. Out of his wrestle and wear of soul, and of theirs who wrought with him, through those fierce years which were closed with his death, has come the abundant and wide prosperity which makes this pleasure ground our possession. Because he suffered, we enjoy. He staggered under loads of obligation and of care, that we might afterward live at ease. And if the burdens which he wearily bore, and bore to the end, had been lightened by trick or by treachery in him, there had been for us no solid peace and no secure pleasure. But there are purposes fulfilled in erecting this statue, which give to this service a moral significance; through relation to which the occasion becomes one of general interest. It is no civic vanity, it is no State pride, it is no narrow enthusiasm for party, which has raised this memorial of one not otherwise related to us than to all the States of the Republic; of one who has so long passed from the earth that his influence over parties has become imperceptible. The people have reared it, because they loved him; because they recognize in him a friend, whose temper and thought were in harmony with their own; whose humor attracted, and whose simplicity charmed, while his power sustained them; who would have been at home in any of their houses, yet to whom they had gladly twice confided unequaled trusts; whose death smote their hearts with a personal grief. He stands as an exponent of what the American life can produce, without foreign assistance. Uncultured as he was, by school or college, his whole school life hardly covering a year, trained only by reflection, by honest labor and by intercourse with men—ancient literatures, renowned universities, the arts and powers of European culture, can claim no part, or only a remote and impalpable part, in what he became. Indeed, nothing can claim to have helped him much, except the text books which are familiar to all, and the atmosphere of freedom and the incentives to labor, which were his only inheritance. Born in the humblest conditions of life, but of a Christian father and mother, stirred in childhood by stories of the perilous border life, the bloody fringes of whose retiring robes had hardly vanished beyond the horizon, reading when he could read, by the light of pine knots, in the Bible, Æsop's Fables and Pilgrim's Progress, coming on only later to Burns and Shakespeare, talking in clubs, arguing in Courts, writing for newspapers, pleading at last for what he deemed truth before attentive assemblages of men, but never matriculated in any academy, and never master of any language save that which he had learned in childhood—if any man represents, better than others who have been eminent in office among us, the native American locality and training, this is the man. The country claims him therefore, as its outgrowth. He represents the influences inherent in its social and political atmosphere and soil; and in the moral life which was in him he shows what a lad, whose Bible was his only preacher, whose Christian mother was his church, may come to be, in a society full of temptation and of sin, when he tries intently to do the duty which is next to his hand, and looks to God for guidance and blessing. But more, even, than this is implied in the fact that this statue has been raised, by the hands of the people, to the name and the fame of Abraham Lincoln. They who have done this have not merely been moved by love to him, and a grateful remembrance of what he accomplished, for themselves and their children. They have not been impelled by the simple desire to prolong and to distribute, so far as they may, the invigorating force of his personal example. They have done it, also, as challenging for him a permanent place in the history of mankind. They have said, in effect, in erecting this statue, that in their estimation he is one of the men of whom other lands and future ages are sure to speak; and that thus it is well that memorials be made of him as permanent in their structure as nature permits, and as art can attain. The men of other times shall see it. It connects us, as we stand here, with the coming generations. We cannot tell what great institutions shall have risen, and flourished, and turned to decay, before the figure upon this rock shall have yielded itself to rust and rot! And so, in erecting it, we say of him whom it represents that he is one whom the ages to be will speak of still, when we shall have passed not from life alone, but from all human recollection; whose name will be heard on peoples' lips when the city has been changed, when political establishments have been variously modified, and when the written records of our time shall have yielded their place to other annals, in other tongues. We say this; and we are right in saying it. For as long as history continues to be written, some mention must be made in it of this remarkable American people; starting from such obscure beginnings; spreading across such unsurpassed spaces; adventuring on such new and prophetic experiments; achieving as real and wide a welfare; distributing an influence so immense and so vital over the earth. And as long as mention continues to be made of this peculiar American public, so long some notice must certainly be taken of that momentous passage in its experience, when, after a long and silent preparation on either side, the forces that fought against and for the national life came into direct and deadly grapple; when the continent was fenced by the flags and guns of a superb navy for the field of the contest; when armies, unsurpassed in numbers and equipment, sprang as wrestlers into the great arena; when the issue hung balanced in doubt so long, and when the extensive nations of Christendom were awed, yet eager spectators of the scene. Many parts in our history, which have been to us full of interest, will gradually cease to awaken attention, and slip from the notice of all but the most microscopic of students, as time goes on. Many questions which we yet struggle over with strenuous, eager and wide discussion, will seem mere rubbish a century, two centuries, ten centuries hence. New questions arising will have shoved them from their place. A larger philosophy will have solved and dismissed them. But the vast rebellion, and the consequent civil war, which shook the nation to its base; among which we sometimes were tempted to feel that Apocalyptic prophecies were realized—that the heavens were on fire, and that mountains were about to slip from their seats into seas of blood—of this grand struggle, so fiercely maintained, so triumphantly ended, history will speak while she speaks of anything that has happened or been done on this side the Atlantic. And as long as history speaks of this the name of Lincoln must be prominent in it. The verdict of the future, looking upon Lincoln must be this: That in a time of intense excitement, all-pervading, all arousing, when feeling was passionate, apprehension vivid, the emotions of a continent preternaturally stirred, and when anger easily turned to malignity, and a just indignation became a vindictive thirst for vengeance—he kept his frank and kindly temper and in the midst of all the jealousies, and the fierce animosities raging around him, was to the end as patient and calm, as ready in sympathy and as sweet in forgiveness, as if no war storms vexed the land. That in a time of immense opportunity for any dishonest greed or gain, his integrity was as perfect as the lustre in the diamond, as the blue in the sky; that with millions of gold waiting his word for their secret distribution, he touched no penny that was not his, and fell in death as uncorrupted as when he entered on his great office. That in a time of prodigious, unanticipated movements, without precedent or parallel, when forces as wide as the country it self, as vehement as its winds, and as fiery as lightning, were loosened into tremendous collision; when shrewdest schemes were as powerless for the crisis as bulwarks of paper against the whirlwind; when all the foundations seemed out of course, and only Omniscience could foretcast the end—he showed an extraordinary sagacity and prudence, committing himself to no peremptory theory, availing himself of all men's counsels; arguing against his own convictions, until he had tested their correctness; following patiently the indications of events, and finally leading the nation which had trusted him, by ways untrod until he trode them, from the precipice to the plain, and out of the thunderous uproar and gloom to the dawn of a bright prophetic day. That when lifted to an eminence in the public confidence, and the popular regard, such as few before him ever occupied, and exercising powers over armies and navies, over Generals and peoples, which almost no statesmen of the world have possessed, he was strangely unexcited by such sudden and surpassing personal distinction; that, intent upon his country's welfare, he thought of himself with a singular humility; and while his name at the end of a commission raised the humble to rank and gave some men command over thousands of others, he was as devoid of ostentation or arrogance as if he had still been a boatman on the river, or the faithful advocate of a few obscure clients. That he never despaired of the future of the Republic, amid whatever disasters of fears; but kept through all his perfect faith, sublime in its simplicity, in the Government which protected the popular rights; in the principles it incorporated; in the advancing civilization which they were to help to build and mould; and in the God who, as he believed, watched over and guarded that sacred and imperial trust. That he was immensely successful in his work; and saw the rebellion, which reared its haughty front to the sky, which had scoffed at his plans, mocked his power, and heaped fierce ridicule on himself, as thoroughly beaten out of life as if storms of aerolites had smitten its armies, and mountains had fallen and buried them up; that he saw the nation more thoroughly one for the very struggle through which it had passed, and its place among the peoples of the world more distinguished than ever, for the blood it had spilled and the treason it had crushed. That he was identified with the wisest movement of popular liberation which the world had yet seen; and, recognizing his opportunity, hearing the solemn voices of Providence, not disobeying the heavenly vision, was permitted and enabled to loosen the shackles from the limbs of a race, and to lift the millions of slaves in the land to a wholly new level of privilege and of right; making the desert bloom before them; setting up on the horizon, that had been lowering and red, opportunities and hopes which gleam on their eyes like gates of pearl. That he lived to see all this success, and to feel his veins swelling with that rich joy which swept like a current of quickening life throughout the land, and then died a martyr to the cause he had championed; sealing his service with the sacrifice of his life; leaving the nation which he had rescued, in wildest grief, throwing the shadow of a strange sorrow over lands which he had never seen, and seeking the rest denied him here in the presence of Him who had raised him up! What Burke said of Clive, in British India, we may, only with greater emphasis, say of Lincoln in our own land: "He forded a deep water on an unknown bottom; but he left a bridge for his successors, over which the lame could hobble and the blind might grope their way." Standing now in front of his monument, recollecting the dangers which were not all buried when his life closed, remembering the duties which we owe to the Republic for which he did so much, so well, and looking forward over the land and into the years which still shall claim our humbler work, let us hear, also, those other words, so solemn and sublime, which fell from him at the service in Gettysburg, six years ago the coming month; and let them fall on us afresh, as if God touched those tranquil lips, and made them vocal once more with counsels

"It is for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from the honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that the Government of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Until it perishes, his work in the world shall never fail! Until it perishes, a nobler memorial than we can build shall testify to those who anywhere rejoice in the American example of a popular government and a regulated liberty, of the wisdom and the spirit, and the office for mankind, of Abraham Lincoln!

An Unpublished Document by Lord Byron.

Just as everybody was congratulating himself and everybody else that the thing had ceased concerning the Byron controversy, the Academy, a new literary weekly of London, brings the following important document to light. The Academy says:

"The following document is printed as a contribution to literary history. It was drawn up by Lord Byron in August, 1817, while Mr. Hobhouse was staying with him at La Mira, near Venice, and given to Mr. Matthew Gregory Lewis for circulation among friends in England. It was found among Mr. Lewis' papers after his death, and is now in the possession of Mr. Murray.

"The document speaks for itself sufficiently to need no comment on our part:

"'It has been intimated to me, that the persons understood to be the legal advisers of Lady Byron, have declared 'their lips to be sealed up' on the cause of the separation between her and myself. If their lips are sealed up, they are not sealed up by me, and the greatest favor they can confer upon me will be to open them. From the first hour in which I was apprised of the intentions of the Noel family to the last communication between Lady Byron and myself in the character of wife and husband (a period of some months) I called repeatedly and in vain for a statement of their or her charges, and it was chiefly in consequence of Lady Byron's claiming (in a letter still existing) a promise on my part to consent to a separation if such was really her wish, that I consented at all; this claim and the exasperating and inexplicable manner in which their object was pursued, which rendered it next to an impossibility that two persons so divided could ever be reunited, induced me reluctantly then, and repeatedly still, to sign the deed, which I shall be happy—most happy—to cancel, and go before any tribunal which may discuss the business in the most public manner.

"Mr. Hobhouse made this proposition on my part, viz: to abrogate all prior intentions—and go into court—the very day before the separation was signed, and it was declined by the other party, as also the publication of the correspondence during the previous discussion. Those propositions, I beg here to repeat, and so call upon her and hers to say their worst, pledging myself to meet their allegations—whatever they may be—and only too happy to be informed at last of their real nature.

"(Signed) BYRON.

"August 9, 1817."

"'P. S.—I have been, and am now, utterly ignorant of what descriptions her allegations, charges, or whatever name they may have assumed, are; and am as little aware for what purpose they have been kept back—unless it was to sanction the most infamous calumnies by silence.

"[Signed,] BYRON.

"'La Mira, near Venice.'"

The same paper publishes a statement from Mr. Murray, the bookseller, positively asserting that every copy of "Byron's Memoirs" was destroyed under his (Murray's) directions.

APPALLING DISASTER!

Steamboat Burned—200 Lives Lost!

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 28.

A private dispatch to the Memphis Packet Co. says the steamer Stonewall burned this morning near Sheely's Landing. Forty passengers and the crew were saved. Stonewall left here for New Orleans on Tuesday with 100 cabin and deck passengers, and from the dispatch received it is inferred that all those above the number mentioned are lost. Further particulars are expected soon.

LATER.—Mr. Finnegan, a planter of Bolivar, Ls., has arrived from the wreck of the steamer, and furnishes the following particulars of the appalling disaster to this boat: The boat caught fire at half past six o'clock Wednesday evening, at a point a little below Neely's Landing, 125 miles below St. Louis, from a candle which the deck passengers had near some hay while playing cards. The steamer was run on a gravel bar, the pilot supposing that the passengers could wade ashore on the bar. Unfortunately at the end of the bar there was a slough, and here it was that the larger number was drowned. The boat was not run on the bar but two feet, and the shallowest point about her had five or six feet of water. The boat had so much hay aboard that she burned like a tinder, and all efforts to put it out were unavailing. The Belle of Memphis came up at half past nine, three hours after the accident, and rendered all the assistance possible. Out of two hundred and fifty passengers and crew, only fifty are known to have been saved. The last seen of Captain Scott he was floating down stream on a bale. The people saw the light and listened to assist. One man rescued sixteen persons with a skiff and had it not been for this helpful craft would have been lost. A gentleman from Paducah, Kentucky, swam ashore with a lady and the [illegible] returned to save her child. In swimming ashore he was grasped by a drowning man and would have been drowned had he not kicked him off. One man was taken from the wrecked body burned that he died as soon [illegible] Captain Doudy, [illegible] Lee Dan, were saved. The pilots, [illegible] were the only ones of the crew [illegible]

His daughter is one of the wives of James Young, Brigham's oldest son. The editors of the Magazine are wealthy and influential.

PETROLEUM MARKETS.

OIL CITY, Oct. 28.

The Petroleum market on the Creek was devoid of any new characteristics to-day. There was no change in prices. Nearly all the shippers had previously to-day, purchased as much as they can move before the advance in freight charges take effect, and consequently the demand was only moderate. On the Upper Creek the stock of oil for delivery is so very exceedingly light, and for immediate delivery there were few sellers. On the Lower Creek the sale day was not so great as on the Upper Creek, but still the stock was light and holders were very firm. The whole, however, matters further than buyers at $5.60, and two or three lots were offered at the price without finding takers. For future deliveries there was a fair demand. For October all the way, $5.50 could have been obtained on the Upper Creek, $5.65 was bid. For other's thirty days figures diverge off on the price of spot was generally off rail. The [illegible] are apparently in the act of changing the market in the old direction and have turned the attention to the [illegible] of the Philadelphia Refiners and the Pittsburgh Crude markets. PIONEER SCHOOL.—The public school at Pioneer will commence its winter session of three months on Monday next, Nov. 1st, with T. B. Thorn, who has taught there during the last year, as principal, and Miss Alice Northrop as assistant. The school directors are entitled to much credit for the erection of a fine school building, it being superior to any other in Venango county outside of Franklin, Pleasantville and Oil City. It is requested that all scholars attend on the opening day of the school, as they will then be graded.

PRESENTATION.—The friends of Mr. P. A. Allain, railroad agent at Parker's Landing, assembled in the sitting room of the Eckert House, that place, on Wednesday evening, and presented that gentleman with an elegant gold watch and chain, in testimony of their high appreciation of his many good qualities. Mr. Dunlap, of the firm of Winsor Bros. & Co., was the "spokesman," and made an appropriate address, to which Mr. Spain as happily responded. Twenty or thirty persons were present, and after partaking of refreshments the company adjourned en masse to the opera house. The watch and chain were purchased of Castle Bros in this city.

THE Berger Family Bell Ringers give their last entertainment at Corinthian Hall this evening, and the reserved seats having been nearly all sold, there will no doubt be a very large audience. The Erie Republican referring to their performance in that city on Tuesday evening says:

"Miss Stanley and Miss Berger, both sung beautifully. Mr. Russell, as a comic delineator of character, has no superior, and is inimitable. In the music of the bells we never heard excelled. The Concert quartette, by the four young ladies, was an exceedingly happy effort. In short the audience were most happily entertained throughout, as the repeated encores indicated.

ALAS! POOR YORICK!—Dr. Thayer, the Indiana circus and menagerie showman of Gilmore, who exhibited here last summer, has gone into winter quarters with his establishment at Cincinnati, under the guardianship of the Sheriff. The whole property has been seized at the suit of New York parties for a printing bill amounting to nearly $3,000. The Gazette says: "Following the first suit came eight others by employes. Franklin Howes brings suit for $750, 26 weeks' services as equestrian manager and tender of trained horses, as well as for services of his wife as equestrienne, for all which he was to receive $160 a week; Chas. Abbott, the clown, sues for $363, balance on account for services at $25 a week; Frederick A. Dubois sues for $525, being a balance due on $1,600 for services in advertising agent from April till October; Joseph N. Neal, gymnastic performer, sues for a balance of $126, at $25 per week; Joseph Bordeaux, also a gymnastic performer at the same pay, sues for a balance of $75; Chas. H. Lowry, equestrian, at same pay, sues for a balance of $200; and James Blakely sues for $900, on judgment recovered elsewhere. The attachments issued in all these cases. We learn, however, that proceedings will be instituted to dissolve the partnership, and the appointment of a receiver to sell the whole property.

Dr. Thayer is one of the best clowns in the world, and everybody has laughed at his witticisms. Once, however, "the joke" is on the jokist. He will recover himself one of these days, and we shall again hear the blast of his bugles and see his triumphal chariot and gay cavalcade passing through the oil region. "Right this way, Merryman."

Death of Col. Drake, the Oil Pioneer.

Colonel E. L. Drake, who put down the first oil well in this country, and who at one time amassed a considerable fortune in the oil business, died recently in a Connecticut poor house. The fact that he had been greatly impoverished for several years past was known to some of our older citizens, who had occasionally relieved his wants by private remittances. A year ago, learning that his family was in a state of extreme destitution, we urged that a sum of money be raised by public subscription as a testimonial to his distinguished achievement as the pioneer oil miner in this country. But the proverb that "what is everybody's business is nobody's," was verified in the fact that while many of our own citizens would have subscribed generously to that object, the proposition fell stillborn for lack of some person to give it practical effect. About a mile below Titusville the first oil well derrick that was ever built, in this or any other country, is still to be seen. In the light which petroleum has thrown upon the world since, it is sad to reflect that the man who first bored for oil, and by his pluck and perseverance, not only flooded a community with sudden riches, but increased the wealth of the world, died as a common pauper.

Col. Drake first made his appearance here in 1857. Previous to that time he had been a conductor on a railroad in Connecticut. He came to Oil Creek to obtain for another person an acknowledgment of a deed from one Squire Trowbridge, living in Cherrytree township, Venango county. Calling casually at the office of Brewer & Watson in Titusville, he there found a bottle of crude oil, and his curiosity being excited concerning it, he learned from Dr. Brewer all facts of interest connected with its production, viz: that it flowed from natural springs on the Watson flats; had been known to the Seneca Indians before the settlement of this region, and had been introduced by them as liniment or medicine to white persons, and sold to the druggists; and latterly had been gathered by Brewer & Watson and used for lighting the sawmills of the firm and for lubricating purposes.

Drake visited the flats to examine the oil springs, and while there conceived the idea of boring to the sources of the oil. Returning to the East he presented his views to a number of friends, and the result was that in the following year he came back to the oil region as the agent of an existing oil company at New Haven, who had purchased an oil tract, and Drake had full authority to bore, but very little means for the undertaking.

A writer in the Atlantic Monthly of June last, who visited this region for the purpose of writing the history of the oil development, thus describes the operations of Col. Drake:

Drake may have got his idea from having heard that parties, sinking artesian wells for salt down on the Allegheny, were sometimes annoyed by meeting with a flow of oil. At all events, his first step was to visit the salt works near Pittsburg, and engage experienced hands to go up and sink a well for him. A bargain was made; but it was not kept, the honest drillers for salt concluding, after Drake's departure, that the man must be a fool who thought of drilling for oil. A second trip to Pittsburg, in a buggy (there was no railroad from Oil Creek then), resulted in another contract, which was broken for similar reasons. Drake then made a third trip; and finding it idle to talk of oil to men who were accustomed to regard it only as a nuisance troubling their salt water veins, he proposed to one of them to go with him and bore for salt. Salt seemed reasonable, and the man accepted his offer; and finally, in June, 1859 ground was broken for the first artesian oil well.

The drillers wished to make a large cribbed opening to the rock, which seems to have been their usual method of starting a well. But Drake said he would drive down an iron tube instead. This plan, which his friends claim was original with him (if so, it is a pity he didn't secure a patent for it, which would be worth a fortune to him now), was adopted, and it has been in use ever since, not only in sinking oil wells, but in artesian borings for other purposes. The pipe was driven thirty two feet, to the first stratum of rock. The workmen then drilled thirty-seven feet and six inches farther, entering what is known as the first sand rock, and making a total depth of sixty-nine and a half feet. They were at this point, when, on day (August 28, 1859), as the tools were lifted out of the bore, a foaming, dirty fluid, resembling somewhat, in appearance, boiling maple sugar, rushed up, and stood within a few inches of the top of the pipe. It was oil.

In the meanwhile Drake had had great difficulties to overcome: and greater were before him. There was still no railroad to that part of the country, and all his machinery and apparatus had to come in wagons from Erie—a distance of forty miles. He had to send to Erie for everything—once even for a pair of common shovels, the store at Titusville being unable to furnish them. He had soon spent the money advanced to him by the company, and it refused to advance him more. He had exhausted his credit, too, and could not get credit for the value of an oak plank or a centre-bit. He was thought insane, and people called him "Crazy Drake." His workmen were unpaid and discontented, and his enterprise must have failed when on the very verge of success, had not two gentlemen of Titusville, worthy of mention here—Messrs. E. D. Fletcher and Peter Wilson—having faith in the man and his work, come to his assistance. They indorsed his paper and loaned him money, and with this timely aid he struck oil.

Yet even now, with his well in operation, pumping twenty-five barrels a day, he seemed to be getting deeper and deeper into difficulty. He found, as he afterwards said, that he had an elephant on his hands. There had been a demand for oil, at a good price, in small quantities; but there was no demand for it in large quantities. Imitators followed him, other wells were sunk, and the market was flooded. Teamsters charged ten dollars for hauling a barrel to Erie, where it could not fetch ten dollars. The oil could not be generally used as an illuminating agent without being refined, and the coal oil refiners refused to touch a rival production, whose success in the market would be likely to injure their interests. Drake's health, if not his spirits, gave way under these complications, and he returned to the East about the time when petroleum—first refined by James McKeown and Samuel Kier, of Pittsburgh—was coming into general use. The great oil excitement came too late for poor Drake to profit by it. He is now a poor man, after having been the author of wealth to many and of comfort to millions. He may console himself with the reflection (if he is a good patriot) that petroleum, which he gave to the country, paid a government tax at one period (1864–65) of ten thousand dollars a day; but he would be better consoled, I doubt not, if now the country should do something for him.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF THE STAMPS?—It is announced that up to the 18th instant but $34,985 of all the moneys raised by contribution in and out of the State for the relief of the widows and orphans of the unfortunate miners who perished in the Avondale mine, had been received by the Treasurer of the Fund. The total amount collected for this purpose we have seen estimated at over $200,000. It was not, certainly, under $150,000; and the fact that so small a portion of it has been forwarded to the Treasurer, several weeks having elapsed since the collections ceased, is remarkable, for it is full time that every dollar of it should have been accounted for and safely deposited in the hands of those who have been appointed to take charge of and administer the fund. The widows and orphans stand in need of the assistance which the generous contributors designed to render, and it should not be delayed. The Treasurer suggests that he has advice of large collections which have not yet reached his hands. All parties having those funds in their custody are solicited to remit the same to him at once. It is the present expectation of the Committee to give $300 per year to each widow and $190 per year to each child under 14 and 16 years of age.

Silver Mining in Nevada.

SILVER CANON, Nevada, Oct. 10, 1869.

Editors Morning Herald:

There probably never was an excitement occasioned by the discovery of mineral in the State of Nevada, equal to that at White Pine during the winter and spring of 1869. The consequence was that thousands rushed to the new Eldorado, expecting to make a fortune in a few months, but for the most part were doomed to a bitter disappointment. In order to extract the silver from the rock it is necessary to erect expensive machinery, and it requires a good fortune to open a silver mine and get it in operation. The ore is first taken to the mill where it is crushed, which is done by its being placed under the "stamps," a series of hammers weighing six hundred pounds, which are raised and dropped by means of an iron shaft with "cams" attached. When it is reduced to a powder it is placed in the furnaces and roasted for twelve hours; it is then taken out and placed in an iron tank with a quantity of quicksilver and water, and agitated for several hours, until all the particles of silver adhere to the silver. This forms what is called "amalgum." The silver is then separated from the quicksilver, cast into bars, and is then ready for shipment.

Some of the ore works without roasting, which is a great saving; but where there is much "base metal" it does not amalgamate with the silver without passing through the furnace.

White Pine is rather dull at present, owing, in a great measure, to the number of claims in course of litigation. It is confidently expected, however, that as soon as the claims now in dispute are decided, and the district has recovered from the relapse occasioned by being overdone, that it will become one of the best mining camps in the State. At the present time there is shipped a large amount of bullion daily. The district is composed of the towns of Hamilton, Treasure City and Shermantown, the aggregate of whose population is estimated at twenty thousand.

The principal mines are located on Treasure Hill and Chloride Flats, a section of liable land on the south side of Treasure Hill. It is estimated that the Eberhardt Co. have over one million dollars worth of ore now in right. There is at present thirteen mills in the vicinity, all running, and several more in process of erection.

The White Pine Water Works Co. have completed their works at a cost of over two millions of dollars, and are now supplying Hamilton and Treasure City with water. At the latter place water sold for 50 cents per bucket last winter.

I left White Pine for Hiko (170 miles distant) August 27, and after traveling two days with freight, chartered a horse and went on in advance. Water is very scarce on the road from White Pine and Hiko, it being forty miles between springs in some instances, and then a person is obliged to leave the road and go miles into the mountains to obtain it. Hyko City, the county seat of Lincoln county, is situated near the head of Pahranagat Valley, and contains about forty dwellings, four stores, a boarding house and "gin-mill." The valley is one hundred and thirty miles in length, and from two to five miles in breadth, and is susceptible of a high state of cultivation. There are a number of farmers now in the valley, who tell me that sixty bushels of barley, oats or corn, and three hundred bushels of potatoes to the acre is an average crop.

The former sells readily at ten, the latter at three cents per pound. This land has all to be irrigated, which is done with water from numerous springs coming out at the foot of the mountains, the largest of which is Ash Spring, twelve miles below Hiko. Considerable expense is incurred in starting a farm, or "ranch," as it is called here, in digging ditches and fencing, the timber for which is hauled from the mountains, a distance of from ten to twenty miles, but when once in operation, it proves to be very profitable, as there is a ready market at very high prices.

Yours, very truly, G. E. C.

P. S. The WEEKLY HERALD is received, by which I see the "oil" business is very brisk. Should I be so unlucky as to strike oil instead of water here, I should soon expect to see some familiar faces from Titusville here. G. E. C.

The Petroleum Trade of Bremen.

With the rapid and gratifying increase in the consumption of Petroleum in Europe, there has come into existence quite a spirit of rivalry among the larger North German ports as to which should receive and distribute the vast quantities of Petroleum that are now annually exported hence to Northern Europe. For several years Antwerp was the leading port, and at one time received and distributed more oil than any two other ports, but latterly the trade at this port has fallen off, having been diverted to Bremen by a better system of storing and insuring oil, and to the better facilities for both receiving and distributing, which the latter port has enjoyed during the last eighteen months or two years. The following statistics, from the circular of Fr. Knuth, show the exact condition of the trade at Bremen from January 1st to October 1st, this year, and during the same period in 1868:

Sales at Bremen from the 3d to the 30th Sept	82 000	3 400
Same time in 1868	36,900	3,400
Expeditions from the 3d to the 30th of September	54 588	6 787
Same time in 1868	37,200	9 238
Total expeditions from Jan. 1st to Oct 1st	211 755	37 757

Same time in 1868	27 046	19,400
Total arrivals to Oct. 1st	184 702	—
Same time in 1868	204 498	52 397
Stock in all hands Sept. 30th, 1869	47 845	11,986
Same time in 1868	131 945	39,483
Expected Sept. 30, 1869	53 000	—
Same time in 1868	51,670	16 200

The above has reference only to Refined oil. Of Crude there were received during Sept. over 11,000 barrels. There were no receipts of Lubricating oil, but there were sent to the interior and taken from warehouses for consumption during the month named, about 500 barrels. Of Naphta, 400 barrels were taken for consumption.

OLIVE LOGAN has at last captured the Bostonians. She lectured to them on Thursday night about "Girls." Olive propitiated them, at her entrance, by her dress and general "make up." She was attired in a black velvet dress, with an overskirt of black silk, each in the latest style. About her neck were beads of gold, and in front a parterre of ribbons. Her head was neatly arranged in the newest mode, and all the hair was apparently natural. By this compromise—this declaration of peace between the two contending parties—the public have been the gainers. Had the war continued there is no telling when Miss Olive would have ceased saying sharp things of Boston, and Boston refrained from retorting snarily at the lecturess. No Hubbite will hereafter go to Logan's cabin hungry, and be shooed off without a literary feast.

THE NEW TWOS.—The new two dollar green backs have made their appearance in small quantities. They are printed on a patent fibered paper and are decidedly the handsomest notes of their denomination that have been issued since the beginning of the war. There is an excellent view of the capitol in the centre and a portrait of Jefferson on the left end. The figures, scroll work and lettering are very fine. It this note is well counterfeited the government may just as well abandon all attempts to print greenbacks that are not susceptible of imitation.

The Hide Trade of the United States.

Elsewhere we give an interesting letter from Mr. G. E. C., now engaged in mining operations in New Mexico. He will go from there, we expect, to some mine in this region, and subsequently to Africa, South America. But like many other engaged in this fascinating pursuit, he is seeking "new worlds to conquer," and sends us so interesting facts connected with mining operations in Nevada.

Apropos to this subject the important fact is now established by foreign statistics that the United States contains a greater amount of useful minerals than the other countries of the world combined. It is not will further appear at a glance at that mineral resources of the country, as yet imperfectly developed. In the East we have the Alleghany mountain range, containing Appalachian coal and iron deposits, extending in Pennsylvania to Georgia and Alabama; length about 900 miles and in rage width 120. In the West we have the Rocky Mountain and Sierra Nevada ranges, stretching a still greater distance, abounding in precious metals of nearly all descriptions. Trans-Rocky Mountain Mississippi valleys, midway between these two ranges, the total deposits are practically inexhaustible. Local the country is particularly rich. Beginning with a severe [illegible] on the 16th of November, 1811, and ending with an alarming movement on the 12th of December, 1812, this series of earthquakes extended over the whole basin of the Mississippi, and caused great apprehension even on the Atlantic coast. The church bells rung in the city of Charleston, S. C., and the [illegible] Knoxville, Tenn. In the great West [illegible] that time the greater number of buildings were of logs and of one story. Should [illegible] shake that region, the massive war houses of St Louis and Chicago would probably come tumbling about the heads of the citizens, and the destruction of life and property would be immense.

Such a convulsion, the writer [illegible] thinks, is very likely to occur in the course of a century. May not architects do well to build with reference to such a possibility? In San Francisco the frequency of earthquakes has produced a peculiar style of architecture. The houses are low, and wood is a favorite material.

Proclamation for Thanksgiving.

Governor Geary has issued his official proclamation for the observance of this annual festival. Reciting the Proclamation of the President, which appoints the 18th day of November as a day of National Thanksgiving, the Governor proceeds:

The President of the United States having issued the foregoing proclamation, I do most earnestly advise that the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, for the purposes therein given, strictly observe the recommendations.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Commonwealth, at Harrisburg, this [illegible] day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and of the independence of the United States the ninety fourth.

JOHN W. GEARY.

By the Governor.

F. JORDAN,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

GEN FRANZ SIGEL is to address a Republican mass meeting in Buffalo on Saturday. The election occurs on Tuesday next. The Germans who "fought with Sigel" intend to vote for Sigel, and the prospects of Republican success are bright looking every hour.

Exports of Petroleum.

The total export of Petroleum, including Crude, Refined, Naphta, Residuum and Lubricating oil, from New York from January 1st to October 27th, and from all other ports to October 23d, this year, were, in round numbers, 85,000,000 gallons, against 83,779,000 gallons during the same period in 1868. The foregoing figures are taken from the New York Shipping List, and are correct without doubt, but still they do not represent the actual state of the exports with regard to the amounts of Crude and Refined exported. From a glance at the figures, and without further information it would be supposed that the exports this year had fallen off; but whether it has or not can only be determined when the amount of Crude, Refined, Naphta, &c., exported, are known. The following shows the exports from the different ports during the time indicated above, in the years named:

The Industrial Exhibition at Buffalo is now drawing to a close, this being the last week. There have been 1104 entries, many of which are groups, comprising scores, or even hundreds of articles. The popular interest in the fair has been well sustained, the average daily attendance having reached 5,000. It has been a great financial success, and the managers have decided upon holding a similar exhibition every year.

FIVE DOLLARS REWARD.

Lost on Friday evening train, [middle car] between Hydetown and Titusville, a pair of SPECTACLES, contained in the case.

Titusville Morning Herald.

All Sorts.

The Pall Mall Gazette thinks that if Father Hyacinthe and his followers should be driven from the Church of Rome by extreme measures and should really become powerful, it would be forced to give up all the most important and character istic Roman doctrines, and would ultimately develop itself into a creed hardly distinguishable for practical purposes from mild English High Churchmanship. It does not, however profess to expect that any such results will actually take place.

The London Morning Star has been sold out to the Daily News and has ceased to appear as a separate publication. The Star has been regarded as Mr Bright's organ and it has lived long enough to see the principles on which it was started denounced at the outset as extreme, the leading principles of the English government.

An honest rustic went into the shop of a Quaker to buy a hat, for which fifteen shillings was demanded. He offered twelve shillings. As I live, said the Quaker, "I cannot afford to give it thee at that price." As you live, exclaimed the countryman, "then live more modestly, and be hanged to you." Friend said the Quaker, thou shalt have the hat for nothing. I have sold hats for twenty years and my trick was never found out until now.

The death is announced of Mr. Woodward the librarian to the Queen at Windsor Castle. He had written a history of America and a history of Wales, besides several other books of some value. He edited the Fine Arts Quarterly Review and lately prepared a biography of Leonardo da Vinci. He was fifty three years old and a graduate of London University.

Two young men from New Orleans are engaged upon a very sensible pleasure trip. They left home in the summer to make a journey to the sources of the Mississippi in a little skiff. They subsist entirely upon the game and fish which their own prowess brings in. Davenport, Iowa, has been reached and will be their winter quarters. In the spring they will continue their river.

The following is copied from a placard inviting worshippers to Bethesda Chapel, Clapham, England. Ned Wright, who before his conversion was convicted three times of burglary will deliver a gospel address. Come and welcome. No collection.

Not long ago the floor on which a dancing party of colored people of Richmond were cutting it gave way and the whole mass were precipitated into the cellar. Not a very pretty situation, to be sure, but about a score of couples were picked up after the accident.

Governor Clayton of Arkansas, during the war, placed himself at the head of some three or four hundred of the party, but was in a little time by expressing himself very freely to a number of disaffected men from rebels. He was personally denounced by Gen. Catterson as intending to sell out the party and Gov. Clayton after the lie had been passed between them struck his accuser a violent blow on the temple, which was not returned.

Mr. Mason of Virginia, the author of the Trent affair is not aristocratic in his appearance and manners. He drives a chaise to Alexandria, in an old market wagon, behind a worn jaded looking cob, and dresses in a style not different from other farmers of the neighborhood.

TO MY PATRONS.

IN VIEW OF THE COMPETITION IN THE
